THE SMOKE QUESTION ABROAD.

A recent report from Consul General Mason, at Berlin, regarding manufacturing interests in that city, throws some light on the question of smoke consumption. Perhaps most Americans are not aware that the German capital is a great manufacturing city. With a population of 1,879,-000 inhabitants there were in operation during the year 1899 1,351 separate establishments, in which were employed 44,039 operapadding, such as a statement of treasury marks, or $11,510,507. The total number of of the long journey across the continent nanufacturing firms and companies in the whole district of Berlin, which includes the provinces of Brandenburg, Pomerania and West Prussia, was 3.116, with 93,120 operatives, who received during the past year 89,731,744 marks as wages. The consul general reports that this great number of manufacturing establishments does not materially lessen the desirability of Berlin as a place of residence. The factories are If any one has fancied that the Grand kept under strict municipal control in the the Republic is a thing of the interest of public health and comfort. The Practically all the large machine shops, foundries, chemical works and other establishments which make a large use of coal as fuel are located in the outlying suburbs. All are equipped with very tall himneys and furnaces so skillfully conconsumed. Of the private electrical lighting and power plants a large and conby gas motors, which use oil, gas, benzine or alcohol as fuel and produce no smoke. Domestic fuel is mainly limited to hard coal, coke, and especially bricquettes, all practically smokeless.

All factories which consume large quantities of coal are provided with chimneys from 150 to 200 feet high, which, with the aid of underground flues, scientifically constructed furnaces and combustion chambers, secure almost a complete consumption of smoke. At half-past 2 o'clock the President decided to go out for a walk, and, accompanied by the postmaster general and the secretary of the interior, he strolled through the neighboring streets, returning the respectful salutations which were met with from all who recognized him and once or twice he stopped to shake hands with those who stepped up and requested the privilege. Upon his return to the house he cheerily told a group of newspaper men assembled there that Mrs. McKinley was holding her own. During the afternoon the President expressed the opinion that the public was entitled to specific information regarding the nature of Mrs. McKinley's illness and the treatment she was receiving. Up to that time the bulletins issued at intervals since yesterday had been of the briefest and most vague character, and the public was largely in the dark as to the character of the trouble which had brought her to death's door. It was the President's distinct request that a signed statement should be prepared by the physicians and given to the press. The statement, however, was not issued. In answer to a query regarding Mrs. Mc Kinley's health President McKinley said after returning from his walk: "Mrs. Mc-Kinley is holding her own. We believe she is a shade better than she was at noon." The ladles of the Cabinet also took advantage of the slight improvement in Mrs. McKinley's condition to go for a short drive during the afternoon.

It Began After She Left El Paso and She Collapsed at Del Monte.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 16 .- Mrs. McKinley's present attack of illness began shortly after she left El Paso. She had stood the trip remarkably well up to that time, with the exception of a slight period of depression during the stay at New Orleans. That, however, soon passed away, and she felt unusually well throughout the trip across the State of Texas until El Paso was reached. At that place a bone felon made its first appearance and proved very trying on her nerves, as well as giving her much pain. The heat and dust of the long desert stretch through New Mexico and Arizona was a severe strain on her strength. Before Los Angeles was reached the felon had been once lanced by Dr. Rixey. At the latter place her illness was still further complicated by a severe attack of bowel trouble, and she had a very bad litton, the Indian secretary, in the British night at the residence of Gen.
